

How to Choose a Cataract Surgeon

What to look for, what to ask, and what matters most

Choosing the right cataract surgeon is one of the most important decisions you will make about your vision. Not all surgeons have the same experience, training, or approach. Asking the right questions helps you find a surgeon who matches your needs and earns your confidence.

What to Look For

1 Surgical Volume

Surgeons who perform cataract surgery regularly maintain sharp skills and stay current with techniques. Ask how many procedures they perform each year.

2 Subspecialty Training

Fellowship training in areas like anterior segment or retina provides deeper expertise for handling complex or unusual cases.

3 Complication Management

Every surgeon encounters complications. What matters is whether they can manage them. Ask about their experience handling difficult situations.

4 Independence

Physician-owned practices make decisions based on patient care, not corporate quotas. Ask who owns the practice and who makes clinical decisions.

A good consultation answers your questions and builds trust

Red Flags to Watch For

Rushed Consultations

If the surgeon does not take time to answer your questions or explain your options, that is a concern. You deserve a thorough evaluation.

One-Size-Fits-All Approach

Every eye is different. Be cautious of practices that recommend the same lens or technique for everyone without a personalized evaluation.

High-Pressure Sales Tactics

Upselling premium lenses without discussing whether they are right for your eye is a red flag. Good surgeons inform, they do not pressure.

No Mention of Risks

Any surgeon who guarantees a perfect outcome or avoids discussing potential risks is not being fully honest with you.

Referral for Complications

If a surgeon cannot manage complications themselves and must refer you out, consider their experience level carefully.

The Right Consultation Experience

A great surgeon takes time to listen, examines your eyes thoroughly, explains your options clearly, and answers every question with patience. You should leave the consultation feeling informed, not confused or pressured. Trust your instincts. If something feels off, it is okay to seek another opinion.

My Commitment to You

I am an independent, physician-owned practice. My recommendations are based on what is best for your eyes, not corporate directives. I trained under Dr. Howard Gimbel during residency at Loma Linda and completed a retina fellowship, giving me the expertise to handle both routine and complex cataract cases.

Questions to Ask Any Cataract Surgeon

- How many cataract surgeries do you perform each year?
- How do you handle complications if they arise during surgery?
- Will you personally perform my surgery, or will another surgeon?
- What is your training background and fellowship experience?
- Is this practice physician-owned or part of a corporate group?
- How do you decide which lens implant is right for me?
